Baltimore Entrepreneur Celebrates African American History Month with Open House at New Company Headquarters

Baltimore, MD (2/15/2008) – Carl Bly is a Baltimore born and raised, University of Maryland educated software engineer turned entrepreneur who is committed to spreading his vision of diversity in the IT community. As an African American male, Bly has seen the city of Baltimore grow and change for the better, and he is pleased to add his own company, NCSC, to the growing roster of African American owned IT firms located in the city.

As a minority owned and operated technology firm with both African American and female executives, NCSC is committed to employing a diverse workforce and hiring from the downtown area. After moving into their new offices on Lexington Street three weeks ago the very first position that opened up was filled by a an African American female who lives only minutes from the new downtown location.

In keeping with the spirit of Black History month, NCSC is celebrating their recent relocation to downtown Baltimore with an Open House on February 22, 2008 from noon until three pm.
